HISTORY MUSEUM TO HOST “OUR STORY: EXPLORING THE DEVELOPMENT & GROWTH OF LOCAL CULTURE”

For Immediate Release:

Wednesday, April 15, 2015

The History Museum of Mobile will introduce the first of a multi-part program series on Sunday, April 19, 2015 from 1:30 to 4:00 pm.

On this day, visitors will explore What's at Stake?, the museum's newest exhibit featuring more than twenty local artists exploring the Gulf Coast's natural environment affected by the Deepwater Horizon oil spill. After a gallery tour, visitors are invited to join Howard McPhail, the History Museum of Mobile's curator of minority history, in the classroom for an art project using natural materials found along the Gulf Coast.

This new program series is designed to inspire and empower museum visitors to effectively challenge assumptions, and identify and value multiple perspectives. Throughout this program series, visitors will be invited to explore the various exhibits at the museum and be inspired to connect with the artifacts in the museum's collection in new and exciting ways.

Children and adults of all abilities and learning styles are welcome and encouraged to bring family and friends.

This is a free program, and all materials are included.

Space is limited so reserve your spot today by calling Howard McPhail, Curator of Minority History, at 251-208-7557.

For more information on the History Museum, contact the museum at (251) 208-7652 or e-mail museumrelations@cityofmobile.org.
